

Q.1 Read the given passage and answer the four questions that follow:

The digital revolution has re-framed the way Indian students communicate, learn, and connect. Instagram, WhatsApp, and Facebook have entered the daily lives of millions of students. Today, 398 million young people use social media in India. According to a study compiled by the Internet and Mobile Association of India (IAMAI) in 2023, teenagers spend more than 2-3 hours on platforms like Instagram and YouTube. Social media is an important tool for learning and interaction, but unregulated usage can have serious negative impacts on mental health, academic performance, and emotional well-being. The most alarming characteristic observed in a young Indian student is social media addiction. Reports indicate that 27% of teenagers in India develop features of social media dependency, leading to a lack of concentration, bad academic output, and mental illness conditions. Continuous demands of checking notifications, posting updates, and scrolling feeds form a pattern of instant indulgence thereby causing reduced productivity and increased alienation.

Schools can lead in this area by incorporating media literacy and mental health awareness into the curriculum. Equipping Indian students with digital literacy skills will help them have an open conversation and provide emotional support to maintain a balanced relationship between social media and real life. As the worlds collide digitally, Indian youth have to be equipped with overall skills to navigate these electronic spaces thoughtfully and responsibly. Educators, parents, and policymakers can create that generation that works well in digital culture and values the virtual world's humane touch and well-being.

Unregulated social media use by teenagers leads to _____

1. increased concentration, focus and productivity
2. better communication and social interaction skills
3. decline in emotional and mental health and academics
4. possibility of improved self-image and confidence

Options 1. 1

2. 2

Q.5 Read the given passage and answer the four questions that follow:

I was completely charmed by Madhava Rao's antiquarian bookshop in Basavanagudi, Bengaluru. The stock was not chock-a-block with rarities, first or expensive editions. Its charm lay in stocking well-preserved old editions, some genuinely antiquarian, many out of print, all gathered fetchingly in one room full of gilt-edged spines, the smell of ageing leather creating an enchanting atmosphere. Rao's meticulous care and presentation made every copy desirable.

When I had finished slaving over the books restored, I insisted upon writing about his book shop. But Rao forbade it, relying solely on word of mouth to attract a select customer base. As I got ready to leave his bookshop, he suspected I might sneak a little piece of him after all. He made me promise that I would not write anything. But then 'When can I write about your bookshop?', I asked. He replied, 'When I finally close the bookshop.'

That moment came in March 2013, when he passed away from cancer at 78. Even on his final day, he completed book transactions before turning to his restoration work. A self-taught bibliophile and a perfectionist, Rao restored broken editions to exceptional condition, ensuring his customers held something truly valuable. Despite his passion, he kept a low profile, preferring solitude to study and restore his "antiquarian loot."

Before his death, he quietly sold his collection to a longstanding customer, ensuring the books were preserved. His legacy lives on in the hands of collectors who cherish his devotion to the art of antiquarian book-selling.

What is the significance of Rao selling his collection to a longstanding customer before his death?

1. True to his secretive character, it was his way of closing the shop to the public forever
2. A true bibliophile, Rao ensured that his collection remained in trusted hands
3. A shrewd business man, Rao ensured his shop would continue to make profits .

4. Through the sale, Rao the mercenary, wanted to raise and utilize money for his medical treatment

Q.9 Read the given passage and answer the four questions that follow:

No matter one's nationality, sex, age, or religion, everyone seeks happiness. President Timothy Dwight defined it as: "The happiest person is the person who thinks the most interesting thoughts." This definition places happiness within, not dependent on external circumstances. Like virtue, happiness should come from an inner standard, not exterior factors or material possessions.

Virtue is not situational; it involves resisting all temptations, regardless of size. For example, if a man refuses a Rs.500 bribe but hesitates at a Rs. 1,000,000 offer, his virtue is questionable. Virtue is consistent, unchanging, and independent of temptation. Similarly, happiness should not rely on circumstances or others' actions. Some people carry their happiness like a purse, easily stolen by ill winds, malicious words, or random accidents. Allowing others to control one's peace of mind gives them undue power over one's emotions. Instead, negativity should be treated with humour, and happiness should remain self-determined.

True happiness, like virtue, is resilient and should come from within. While it is impossible to feel exuberantly happy all the time, a sound philosophy can provide an invincible source of joy. Days of anguish caused by ill health, worry, or grief may come, but these should not permanently destroy happiness. Rising above pain is possible through inner strength and thinking interesting thoughts.

Happiness, like virtue, requires consistency and inner discipline. By maintaining a mindset of resilience, focusing on meaningful thoughts, and refusing to be controlled by external forces, one can rise above life's hardships and maintain lasting peace and joy.

Based on your reading of the passage, identify the incorrect statement.

1. Steering clear of challenges and grief can help us rise about life's hardships.
2. Happiness, like a purse, should be guarded from negative influences.
3. Humour helps treat negativity and maintain self-determined happiness.
4. Resilience in maintaining happiness is rooted in one's ability to think creatively and interestingly.
