

Q.1 Read the given passage and answer the four questions that follow:-

It's a tough time to be a glacier. Scientists expected Venezuela's Humboldt Glacier to last another decade, but in 2024 it melted into an ice field, shrinking to under two hectares. This marks the loss of the country's last glacier and signals a grim future for others. Scientists warn that glaciers in countries like Germany and Mexico will also disappear as fossil fuel consumption accelerates global warming. Communities depending on glaciers for fresh water face challenges, as glaciers in mountain ranges like the Andes provide vital drinking and irrigation water for millions of people.

However, about 80% of global glaciers, excluding polar ice sheets, could survive if countries rapidly reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Tropical glaciers in regions such as the Andes, East Africa, and Indonesia, however, are unlikely to recover due to higher temperatures. Despite pledges in the 2015 Paris Agreement to limit warming to 1.5°C above pre-industrial levels, current projections suggest a rise of 3°C, potentially raising sea levels by nearly 10 feet by 2100, threatening island nations like Fiji and the Maldives with destruction.

A proposal to protect ice sheets in Antarctica and Greenland involves a 62-mile-long removable underwater curtain, but experts like James Kirkham from the International Cryosphere Initiative caution that such measures are distractions from the real issue: halting global heating. Without decisive action, glaciers will continue to melt, and more countries will lose their ice. The urgency of addressing climate change has never been clearer, and the world's glaciers can't afford any more delays.

There is hope of survival for a significant number of global glaciers in case _____.

1. large-scale geoengineering projects are implemented the world over
2. communities depending on glaciers for fresh water and irrigation would wean off their dependency
3. innovative proposals like the 62-mile-long removable underwater curtain are not nipped in the bud
4. collective responsibility is undertaken to rapidly reduce green house emissions globally

The urgency of addressing climate change has never been clearer, and the world's glaciers can't afford any more delays.

What does the writer mean by the statement-- 'It's a tough time to be a glacier'?

1. Glaciers are now fast losing their status of fresh water sources.
2. Only 50% of glaciers are likely to survive with the threat of climate change looming large.
3. Glaciers have to bear the brunt of climate change and face an appalling future.
4. Glaciers are unable to help humanity survive and sustain their needs.

The urgency of addressing climate change has never been clearer, and the world's glaciers can't afford any more delays.

Why might the proposal to build a removable underwater curtain be viewed with skepticism by experts like James Kirkham?

1. The curtain is considered only one of the viable solutions to preserve glaciers.
2. The underwater curtain may not significantly reduce greenhouse gas emissions.
3. It diverts attention from urgently addressing the root cause of glacier melting.
4. It is an irreversible and irrational solution that does not guarantee glacier survival.

Current projections of global warming at 3°C above pre-industrial levels suggest that the human race _____.

1. is on the brink of disaster and self-destruction
2. has effectively stopped the rise in global temperatures
3. is conscious of the climate threat and has reduced greenhouse gas emissions

Q.5 Read the given passage and answer the four questions that follow:-

At length the Parsonage was discernible. The garden sloping to the road, the house in it, the green pales, and the laurel hedge all declared their arrival. Mr. Collins and Charlotte appeared at the door as the carriage stopped at the small gate leading to the house.

In a moment they were all out of the chaise, rejoicing at the sight of each other. Mrs. Collins welcomed her friend with the liveliest pleasure, and Elizabeth was entirely satisfied on being so affectionately received. She saw instantly that her cousin's manners were not altered by his marriage; his formal civility was just what it had been, and he detained her some minutes at the gate to hear and satisfy his inquiries after all her family. They were then, with no other delay than his pointing out the neatness of the entrance, taken into the house; and as soon as they were in the parlour, he welcomed them, with ostentatious formality, to his humble abode, and punctually repeated all his wife's offers of refreshment. Elizabeth was prepared to see him in his glory; and she could not help in fancying that in displaying the good proportion of the room, its aspect and its furniture, he addressed himself particularly to her, as if wishing to make her feel what she had lost in refusing him. But though everything seemed neat and comfortable, she was not able to gratify him by any sigh of repentance, and wondered how her friend could have so cheerful an air with such a companion.

Elizabeth's lack of repentance suggests that she is _____.

1. confident about her judgment of Collins' character and her decision
2. stubborn and too arrogant to admit her flaws and weaknesses
3. regretful of her decision, but hides it to protect her pride
4. envious of Charlotte's fate and is content in not having compromised

Q.9 Read the given passage and answer the four questions that follow:-

In July 1973, Amitav Ghosh joined St. Stephen's College in Delhi. Like every other freshman, he was nervous about the first few weeks, when one was 'ragged' – shorthand for being verbally harassed, harangued, interrogated, and intimidated – by seniors. Twenty-five years later, by now an established novelist, Amitav Ghosh wrote: The year I joined College, the word among us freshers was that the most terrifying ragger in College lived in Rudra Court, in L5. Terrifying because he wasn't the usual kind of bullying, bellowing senior. No, he was to them as the panther is to the elephant. He was bearded, and soft-spoken, so stealthy that you never sensed his presence until he had you square in his sights. Young Amitav was able to escape the clutches of this fearful senior for a fortnight. But then he "was nabbed while attempting to abscond" as the Indian Express used to say. The 'legend of L5' caught hold of the fresher, and quizzed him about his interests. 'I like classical music,' answered Ghosh, nervously. 'You do?' said the legend and walked him into his room in Rudra North. The legend put a record on the turntable and began to play it. He asked Ghosh to identify the composer and composition. Beethoven's Emperor Concerto answered the fresher, correctly. Three or four more records were played and all except one accurately identified. At this, 'The legend stuck out his hand. "I'm Rukun Advani," he said. "Let's go down to Maurice Nagar and have a cup of tea."

Why does the passage mention Beethoven's Emperor Concerto?

1. To illustrate that the senior used music to humiliate freshers.
2. To show that Amitav Ghosh had a background in Western classical music.
3. To emphasize that intellect and culture, rather than fear, shaped this form of ragging.
4. To demonstrate that the 'legend of L5', preferred classical music as a means of intimidation.

What was the outcome of Amitav Ghosh's interaction with the "legend of L5"?

1. He was intimidated into learning about classical music.
2. He impressed the senior with his knowledge of classical music.
3. He was unable to answer any of the music-related questions.
4. He was forced to listen to classical music as a punishment.

What set the 'legend of L5' apart from typical ragers in St. Stephen's College?

1. He subjected freshers to rigorous academic quizzes instead of physical harassment.
2. He was known for psychological manipulation rather than open intimidation.
3. He relied on quiet precision rather than overt aggression to unsettle freshers.
4. He maintained an air of mystery, rarely interacting directly with freshers.

What aspect of ragging does the phrase "nabbed while attempting to abscond" humorously highlight?

1. It likens ragging to a criminal pursuit which freshers tried to avoid but were inevitably caught.
2. Ragging in elite institutions was so relentless that escape was futile.
3. The seniors used strategic timing to capture freshers when they least expected it.
4. The tendency of newspapers to exaggerate minor events.
