

Q.1 Read the passage and answer the four questions that follow :-

Part of our programme included spending an afternoon on a machaan that overlooked a waterhole in the forest. Our riding elephants dropped us off, and we were given strict instructions to remain put until later, the elephants would come to pick us up.

So we sat, hoping that a tiger or leopard would come down for a drink. No such luck. After a while, a juvenile rhesus macaque poked its head out and looked around warily. Then, taking infinitesimal care, it emerged into the clearing cautiously. If it had been born and brought up in Delhi, it would have probably charged out, clambered up our machaan and relieved us of our drinking water and snacks. But not this fellow. I thought these forest monkeys were such wimps!

It was getting darker by the minute- and there was no sign of our elephant pickups. So we decided to trek back to Dhikala. We set off in single file along the forest path. When I was suddenly confronted by all the pioneering leaders rushing pell-mell back urgently whispering, 'mad elephant, mad elephant!' I saw the bulk of an elephant- I can't vouch if its head was aggressively cocked and trunk rolled up, appraising us prior to charging. Incontinently, we fled, to our machaan and clambered up.

One spank from its trunk would have sent any of us flying clear across the waterhole! We could only sit quietly. I realised that the juvenile rhesus had a very good reason for being so cautious. We had not.

The purpose of spending an afternoon on a machaan was to _____

1. experience the feeling of being in a tree house.
2. watch the predators in their natural habitat.
3. climb off and on an elephant easily from a height
4. enjoy the beauty of the jungle from a vantage point.

Q.5 Read the passage and answer the four questions that follow:

Tea cultivation in Assam can be traced back to the early 19th century when the region was under British colonial rule. It was during the time of the East India Company that Robert Bruce, an officer with the company, discovered wild tea plants growing in the forests of Assam in 1823. The East India Company began experimenting with tea cultivation in Assam, with the first commercial tea garden established in 1837 at Chabua. However, the initial years were challenging due to lack of knowledge about tea cultivation techniques and the hostile climate and terrain of Assam. The turning point for tea growing in Assam came with the formation of the Assam Tea Company in 1939. The company was established by a group of entrepreneurs who recognised the immense commercial prospects of tea. The Assam Tea Company acquired large tracts of land in the region and introduced advanced cultivation methods, such as plucking the tea leaves using indigenous labourers. To meet the growing demand for labour in the tea gardens, the British introduced the indentured labour system. Under this system, labourers were brought from other parts of India, primarily from Bihar and Odisha, to work in the tea plantations. These labourers known as "coolies" endured harsh working conditions and were subjected to exploitative practices by the plantation owners. The indentured labour system played a crucial role in the expansion of tea plantations in Assam, but it also perpetuated social and economic inequalities.

How was the indentured labour system detrimental for the plantation labourers?

1. The profits accrued were only restricted to the East India Company.
2. They were derogatorily addressed as "coolies".
3. They suffered the evils of exploitation, social and economic inequality.
4. They were never trained in advanced cultivation methods.

Q.9 Read the given passage and answer the four questions that follow :-

Once I was an archaeologist's assistant. I wandered the country probing, exploring, and digging, in search of antiquities, a most interesting occupation, although cynics sometimes called us "grave-diggers." I enjoyed the work immensely.

My master-a famous archaeologist, was a superb, timeless being, who lived a thousand years behind the times, and wanted neither food, roof or riches if only he was allowed to gaze on undisturbed at an old coin or chip of a burial urn. He had torn up the earth in almost all parts of India and had brought to light very valuable information concerning the history and outlook of people of remote centuries. His monographs on each of his excavations filled several shelves in all the important libraries.

And then, as our good fortune would have it, he received an inspiration that Malgudi district was eminently diggable. I am not competent to explain how he got this idea, but there it was. Word was brought to me that he needed an assistant. Within an hour of hearing it I stood before the great man. He had the craziest collection of articles in front of him -pots, beads, useless coins and palm leaves, all rusty and decaying. He had a lens by his side, through which he looked at these articles and made notes. He asked me: "What do you know of the archaeological factors of your district ? "I blinked. Honestly, I didn't know there was any archaeology in our place. I realized that my living depended upon my answer.

The phrase "received an inspiration that Malgudi district was eminently diggable" suggests that the archaeologist _____

1. had a sudden realization that Malgudi had great archaeological potential
2. felt that the soil in Malgudi was easy to dig through for excavations
3. thought that Malgudi was, culturally, a famous site for excavations
4. was unsure about Malgudi's historical significance
