

Q.1 Read the given passage and answer the four questions that follow :-

Over the past few decades, India has undergone a significant economic transformation, emerging as one of the world's fastest growing major economies. This shift began in the early 1990s with economic liberalisation policies that reduced trade barriers, deregulated industries and encouraged foreign investment. These reforms spurred rapid growth, leading to a substantial reduction in poverty and the rise of a sizable middle class.

The technology sector, particularly information technology (IT) and software services, has been a cornerstone of this growth. Cities like Bengaluru, Hyderabad and Pune have become global IT hubs, hosting numerous multinational corporations and startups. This boom has not only created millions of jobs but also positioned India as a leader in the global digital economy.

Infrastructure development has also played a crucial role. The expansion of road networks, modernisations of ports and development of airports have improved connectivity within the country and with the global market. Initiatives like the Goods and Services Tax (GST) have streamlined the taxation system, fostering a more unified national market.

However, challenges remain. Income inequality persists with a significant portion of the population still lacking access to quality healthcare, education, and sanitation. The agricultural sector, which employs a large segment of the workforce, faces issues such as low productivity and vulnerability to climate change.

Looking ahead, India's focus is on sustainable development, leveraging renewable energy sources and fostering innovation.

With a young and dynamic population, the country aims to balance economic growth with social equity, ensuring that the benefits of progress reach all its citizens.

Q.5 Read the given passage and answer the four questions that follow :-

It was a typical morning in Malgudi, with the sun casting its golden glow over the rooftops and the river Sarayu glistening in the distance. The streets were alive with their usual bustle, vendors calling out their wares, bullock carts creaking along, and bicycles weaving through narrow lanes. At the heart of this commotion sat Swaminathan, perched on the steps of his school, waiting for his friends.

Swami's morning had begun with a small adventure. His grandmother had asked him to fetch jasmine flowers from the garden, but in his excitement, he had accidentally trampled on a patch of newly planted marigolds. His father had scolded him, as fathers do, but Swami took it in stride, knowing that the day held greater promise.

At school, the lessons dragged on. Swami's mind wandered to the cricket match planned for the evening. Rajan, the team captain had promised to bring a new ball and Swami could hardly contain his excitement. When the bell finally rang, releasing the boys from their classrooms, Swami bolted out with the energy of a colt, heading straight for the cricket field.

The Sarayu river bank came alive in the evening, with children playing and elders discussing village gossip. Swami felt a deep sense of belongingness here, among his friends and the familiar sights of Malgudi. Life, though simple, was rich in its own peculiar way, and Malgudi held a charm that made every ordinary moment feel extraordinary.

Choose the reason Swami felt a deep sense of belongingness at the Sarayu riverbank.

1. He enjoyed spending time in nature and listening to the gossip of adults.
2. The presence of his friends and the familiar extraordinary charm of Malgudi was comforting.
3. It was just the right place -- charming and quiet, where he could complete his homework.
4. He believed the riverbank was a lucky spot for success at cricket matches.

Q.9 Read the given passage and answer the four questions that follow :-

Maya sat by the window of her apartment in Boston, watching the snowfall coat the streets in silence. The winter here was nothing like the winters she had known as a child in Kolkata, where the chill in the air was softened by the warmth of family gatherings. She thought of her mother's kitchen, the scent of frying luchis and the distant hum of the morning news on the radio. Here, the mornings were different-quiet, lonely, and marked by the distant sound of car engines outside.

The phone rang, jolting her from her thoughts. It was her father, calling from India. "When are you coming to visit us?" he asked, his voice tinged with both hope and sadness. Maya hesitated. It had been two years since her last trip home and with each passing year, the distance seemed to grow-not just geographically but emotionally.

She glanced at the bookshelves in her living room, filled with English novels and photographs of friends from college. Somewhere between these shelves and the memories of her childhood, Maya felt split in two, as if she belonged fully to neither world.

Later that evening, as she prepared dinner, she tried recreating one of her mother's recipes. The spices didn't taste the same, the aroma felt incomplete. But as she sat down to eat, she felt a fleeting connection to home, as if she had carried a piece of it with her despite the miles.

The contrast between Maya's present surroundings and her memories of Kolkata highlights:

1. The inevitability of cultural assimilation in a new and foreign environment.
2. The struggle of maintaining one's cultural identity while adapting to a different place.
3. The insignificance of nostalgia in shaping one's present in alien and different surroundings.
4. The ease with which one can recreate the essence of home in a foreign land.

Options 1. 1

2. 2
3. 3
4. 4

Maya's hesitation in responding to her father's question about visiting home suggests:

1. Her indifference towards returning to Kolkata as she was alienated and distanced.
2. A firm decision never to visit home again without a feeling of regret or connection.
3. A lack of emotional connection with her family and not feeling sequestered.
4. The deepening emotional and geographical distance between her past and present.
