Q.41 Read the passage and answer the questions:

Materials from the Subcontinent and Distant Lands

Chanhudaro is a tiny settlement (less than 7 hectares) as compared to Mohenjodaro (125 hectares), almost exclusively devoted to craft production, including bead-making, shell-cutting, metal-working, seal-making and weight-making. The Harappans procured materials for craft production in various ways. For instance, they established settlements such as Nageshwar and Balakot in areas where shell was available. Other such sites were Shortughai, in far-off Afghanistan, near the best source of lapis lazuli, a blue stone that was apparently very highly valued, and Lothal which was near sources of carnelian.

Mesopotamian texts datable to the third millennium BCE refer to copper mining from a region called Magan, perhaps a name for Oman, and interestingly enough, copper found at Mesopotamian sites also contains traces of nickel. Other archaeological finds suggestive of long-distance contacts include Harappan seals, weights, dice and beads. In this context, it is worth noting that Mesopotamian texts mention contact with regions named Dilmun, Magan and Meluhha, possibly the Harappan region. They mention the products from Meluhha: carnelian, lapis lazuli, copper, gold and varieties of wood.

A Mesopotamian myth says of Meluhha: "May your bird be the haja-bird, may its call be heard in the royal palace." Some archaeologists think the haja-bird was the peacock. Did it get this name from its call? It is likely that communication with Oman, Bahrain or Mesopotamia was by sea.

Mesopotamian texts refer to Meluhha as a land of seafarers. Besides, we find depictions of ships and boats on seals.

Mesopotamian texts datable to the third millennium BCE refer to copper mining from a region called Magan, perhaps a name for Oman, and interestingly enough, copper found at Mesopotamian sites also contains traces of nickel. Other archaeological finds suggestive of long-distance contacts include Harappan seals, weights, dice and beads. In this context, it is worth noting that Mesopotamian texts mention contact with regions named Dilmun, Magan and Meluhha, possibly the Harappan region. They mention the products from Meluhha: carnelian, lapis lazuli, copper, gold and varieties of wood.

A Mesopotamian myth says of Meluhha: "May your bird be the haja-bird, may its call be heard in the royal palace." Some archaeologists think the haja-bird was the peacock. Did it get this name from its call? It is likely that communication with Oman, Bahrain or Mesopotamia was by sea.

Mesopotamian texts refer to Meluhha as a land of seafarers. Besides, we find depictions of ships and boats on seals.

Vijayanagara Empire: The Sacred Centre

The first dynasty, known as the Sangama dynasty, exercised control till 1485. They were supplanted by the Saluvas, military commanders, who remained in power till 1503 when they were replaced by the Tuluvas. Krishnadeva Raya belonged to the Tuluva dynasty. His rule was characterised by expansion and consolidation. During this time, the land between the Tungabhadra and Krishna rivers (the Raichur doab) was acquired (1512), the rulers of Orissa were subdued (1514), and severe defeats were inflicted on the Sultan of Bijapur (1520). Although the kingdom remained in a constant state of military preparedness, it flourished under unparalleled peace and prosperity. Krishnadeva Raya is credited with building fine temples and adding impressive gopurams to many South Indian temples. He also founded a suburban township near Vijayanagara called Nagalapuram, named after his mother. The Virupaksha temple was built over centuries. Inscriptions suggest the earliest shrine dated to the ninth–tenth centuries, but it was substantially enlarged with the establishment of the Vijayanagara Empire. The hall in front of the main shrine was built by Krishnadeva Raya to mark his accession and was decorated with delicately carved pillars. Another important temple, the Vitthala temple, is also significant. Here, the principal deity was Vitthala, a form of Vishnu generally worshipped in Maharashtra. The introduction of this deity's worship in Karnataka reflects how the rulers of Vijayanagara drew on diverse traditions to create an imperial culture.
