Q.41

Read the passage carefully and answer the questions based on the passage:

The Green Revolution was largely funded by international agencies. It focused on providing high-yielding variety (HYV) or hybrid seeds along with pesticides, fertilisers, and other inputs, to farmers. Green Revolution programmes were introduced only in areas that had assured irrigation, because sufficient water was necessary for the new seeds and methods of cultivation. It was also targeted mainly at the wheat and rice-growing areas. As a result, only certain regions such as the Punjab, western U.P., coastal Andhra Pradesh, and parts of Tamil Nadu were targeted. Though, it managed to increase the agricultural output, it also resulted in increased inequalities. In most of the Green Revolution areas, it was primarily the medium and large farmers who were able to benefit from the new technology. This was because inputs were expensive, and small and marginal farmers could not afford to spend as much as large farmers to purchase these inputs. When agriculturists produce primarily for themselves and are unable to produce for the market, it is known as 'subsistence agriculture' and they are usually termed 'peasants'. Agriculturists or farmers are those who are able to produce surplus, over and above the needs of the family, and so are linked to the market. In many cases, the Green Revolution led to the displacement of tenant-cultivators. For landowners began to take back land from their tenants and cultivate it directly because cultivation was becoming more profitable. This made the rich farmers better off, and worsened the condition of the landless and marginal holders.

How did the Green Revolution increase income inequalities?

1. Small farmers were unable to learn the new techniques of agriculture.
2. Small farmers were not able to purchase costly inputs.
3. Small farmers were not able to find labourers.
4. Small farmers were stopped by the large farmers to invest in Green Revolution.

This made the rich farmers better off, and worsened the condition of the landless and marginal holders.

Why did the Green Revolution disrupt the relationship between tenants and landowners?

1. Because direct cultivation of land was more profitable than lending the land on rent.
2. Because landowners were able to purchase expensive seeds and fertilisers.
3. Because better water supply was available after the Green Revolution.
4. Because tenants were not paying the rent on time.

Q.50 Read the passage carefully and answer the questions based on the passage:

The demographic advantage or 'dividend' to be derived from the age structure of the population is due to the fact that India is (and will remain for some time) one of the youngest countries in the world. A third of India's population was below 15 years of age in 2011. In 2020, the average Indian was only 29 years old, compared with an average age of 37 in China and the United States, 45 in Western Europe, and 48 in Japan. This implies a large and growing labor force, which can deliver unexpected benefits in terms of growth and prosperity.
